THE Therapeutic Goods Administration has recalled an additional batch of anticoagulant medicine Clexane (enoxaparin) which has been found to be contaminated by over-sulphated chrondroitin sulphate.

Industry review of IP ownership

IMPEDIMENTS to investment in R&D, clinical trials and manufacturing of pharmaceuticals will be examined in a new review into the pharmaceuticals sector, Innovation, Industry, Science and Research Minister Kim Carr said this week.

Senator Carr said growing global overcapacity posed risks to pharmaceutical manufacturing in Australia.

Releasing the terms of reference for the fifth in a series of strategy groups this year, he said intellectual property ownership was a major factor to be addressed.

"It is imperative...to create an operating environment where it makes good business sense for international firms to invest in Australia," Senator Carr said.

CSL chief executive Brian McNamee will head the review of the pharmaceuticals industry.

The move follows a testing program undertaken by the TGA following reports that the contaminant had been "implicated

in several severe allergic

reactions in the USA and Europe." The TGA said it's continuing to undertake a full analysis of the clinical significance of the contaminant, with no reports of adverse events of the type reported in the US associated

A statement warned that the recalls could result in a shortage of the product in Australia, but said the TGA is working with suppliers to source extra product.

Supplies of both intravenous heparin and Fragmin available in Australia have been tested and are free of the contaminant.

Pharmacists and wholesalers are advised to return any product from affected batches to the manufacturer, Sanofi-Aventis.

DISPENSARY CORNER

HOUSTON, we have a problem. Astronauts aboard the International Space Station are having to hold on, after the facility's only toilet broke down last week.

Reports say NASA may have to order an in-orbit plumbing service call when the space shuttle Discovery visits next Fri.

Apparently a motor failed while one of the crew was using the Russian-made toilet and since then the part which gathers liquid waste has only worked intermittently.

The astronauts haven't been able to fix the problem and instead are using a "bag-like" backup system to collect urine.

Fortunately the "solid waste collecting" part of the toilet is functioning normally.

A SHOPKEEPER in the USA has come up with an unusual way of dealing with shoplifters.

Gabe Fidanque of Colorado says he was losing about $1000 a month from his convenience store, and says police weren't taking enough action.

Now he says he gives offenders a choice. "I say, 'I'm either going to call the cops or you give me one of your shoes.'

"They're too humiliated to come back and ask for their shoe, and that also means they won't steal again," he said.

ONLY in China.

A man from the remote province of Shandong has demonstrated his uncanny ability to squirt milk from his eyes.

Stunned onlookers in Nanjing were amazed when Zhang Yinming drank milk through his nose and then squirted it up to two metres with his eyes.

The People's Daily also reported that at the same time he blew up two balloons with his ears.

Just going for a squirt.
