TGA website changes

THE Therapeutic Goods Administration will launch a new corporate website on 04 May.

The TGA said that over the next month it will provide information on the changes and how to transition from using the old website to the new one.

Global push on resistance

THE problem of anti-microbial resistance requires a collaborative response from leaders in government, science, economics, public policy and industry, according to Medicines Australia.

The comments come in support of the 2011 WHO World Health Day theme, anti-microbial resistance, which is aimed at bring attention to the loss of efficacy of antibiotics as bacteria evolve and mutate.

"The medicines industry shares the WHO's concerns about the global spread of anti-microbial resistance," said MA chief executive Dr Brendan Shaw.

"Without effective antibiotics, many complex medical interventions like chemotherapy, joint replacements and organ transplants would be very difficult or impossible," he added.

According to Shaw, in order to prevent and counter the emergence of resistant infections, governments need to work with pharmaceutical companies to create a new policy environment, as well as greater incentives for research into new antibiotics.

Medicines Australia has also backed a new paper by the International Federation of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers and Associations which urges that medicines be prescribed and appropriately used, in conjunction with greater incentives for firms to invest in the infection area.

MEANWHILE NPS Australia has also backed WHO's theme, saying that Australians need to be Medicinewise with antibiotics this winter, or risk not having antibiotics that work in the future.

NPS cites recent AIHW figures which found that Australians are amongst the highest users of antibiotics in OECD countries, with 14% of all antibiotic drugs prescribed in 2009-10 for upper respiratory tract infections - or around 3 million scripts.

"While antibiotics are a key treatment for many infections, we should only use them when it's really necessary and not just in case," said NPS clinical adviser, Danielle Stowasser.

She also stressed the importance of taking the full course of antibiotics.

Abbott fires up on PBS changes

FEDERAL Opposition leader Tony Abbott says the PBS is under a "sneak attack from the Gillard government".

During a visit to Alphapharm's plant in Brisbane last Fri, Abbott said that the Cabinet approval process for all new drugs meant PBAC recommendations were being "simply ignored" by the govt.

He said this "revolutionary change" to only approve drugs with commensurate savings was changing the PBS from a "demand-driven program to a budget-limited program."

"Now sick people are not going to have access to the medicines they need...this is a very serious development for Australia's health system," Abbott added.

He was joined at the plant by shadow health minister Peter Dutton, who added that changes to the PBS were also an attack on companies like Alphapharm which "add an incredible amount to the industry and to our country."

"[If] we deny sick people and particularly older Australians and pensioners the drugs that they need then we aren't going to keep life expectancy where it is in this country and we aren't going to get better health outcomes for sick Australians," Dutton said.

"So we will keep the pressure on the government and we will support the industry...we will support cheap medicines going to Australians who need them the most," he added.

Alphapharm ceo Dr Martin Cross, who's pictured above centre with Abbott and Dutton during the visit, said that government policy uncertainty was also affecting the export of pharmaceuticals, with plants like Alphapharm's requiring a lot of long term investment.

"The PBS is a national treasure, and the companies that provide the medicines to the PBS are part of the state of both the health and the wealth of the nation and we really do need to make sure this continues".

Board to introduce exam appeals fee

THE Pharmacy Board of Australia has announced the introduction of a new "oral examination appeals fee", with candidates who lodge an appeal required to pay a $150 fee for an internal or external review.

Application forms for the appeal are available from AHPRA staff at the conclusion of the candidate's examination review meeting.

The new fee is detailed in the minutes of the Board's latest meeting on 25 March, which have been published today.

At the meeting the Board also released the consultation paper on the list of required references for pharmacists (PD Mon) which proposes the removal of Martindale among other changes.

An increasing workload of the Board's Registration and Notifications Committee has seen a restructure, with notifications to be considered by the Notifications Committee from next month.

Registration matters will in turn be considered by the Registration and Examinations Committee.

The Finance and Governance Committee of the Board reported on the development of the 2011/12 budget, which will feed into registration fees.

The Board said it would advise the profession of registration fees for next year "in due course".

Nicabate P unavailable

AUSTRALIAN GPs have been asked to stop writing prescriptions for Nicabate P for the next 12 weeks, after a major fire at a GSK packaging plant in the UK.

GSK Consumer Healthcare md for Australia, Graham Read, said the company was anticipating receiving 40,000 Nicabate P units to meet current demand - but these have now been destroyed.

Recent supply difficulties for Nicabate P have seen GSK offer a temporary reimbursement arrangement for pharmacists, but this will now cease, the firm said.

Australia is a priority market for GSK and will be the first to receive new stocks of Nicabate P, with GSK also investigating a number of contingency plans to restore supply.

Pfizer UK recall

PFIZER has announced a UK recall of its Onsenal Capsules 400mg, due to an "inability to provide the efficacy data to confirm the clinical benefit" of the medication.

The UK Committee for Medicinal Products for Human Use requires data on the drug's performance in post-approval studies for the indication 'familial adenomatous polyposis', but this has not been available due to slow recruitment for participants in the post-marketing trials.

More time for TGA review

PARLIAMENTARY Secretary for Health and Ageing, Catherine King, has extended the reporting date for the panel conducting the Therapeutic Goods Administration Transparency Review until 30 June.

The panel was originally scheduled to hand down a report this month, but King said she was acceding to a request for an extension from panel chairman, Professor Denis Pearce.

King said the move would give the group more time to "consider all the input received in developing its report and associated recommendations".

She said the panel had received more than 100 submissions, with input also received during public meetings in Sydney, Melbourne and Perth earlier in the year.

A number of private consultations have also been conducted with different stakeholders across the country as part of the panel's deliberations, King said.

"This is a large number of submissions and demonstrates the importance of, and interest in, the work of the TGA in regulating therapeutic goods," she said.

"The transparency of the TGA is important to get the right. Information about the TGA and its processes ...[making] an important contribution toward improving public health," King emphasised.

The review, announced last year (PD 16 Nov), aims to improve public knowledge of regulatory decision-making and to "enhance public understanding of the benefits and risks of therapeutic goods".

DISPENSARY CORNER

PLAYING with your food.

A German teenager is turning convention on its head after she trained her pet cow to show jump.

The training began when, Regina Mayer's parents refused to buy her a pony, leaving her no choice but to turn to her cow Luna.

The enterprising teen then sought some tips from Swiss cow trainer Anne Wiltafsky, whose life ambition is apparently to teach people that cows can do everything a horse can.

"Cows are unbelievably devoted to people they like," said Wiltafsky.

Under Wiltafsky's tutelage Mayer begun Luna's training by leading her on gentle walks, and cajoling her with pats and treats, before riding her with a saddle, and eventually training her to jump like a showhorse.

MICHAEL Jackson for better health.

Students at the Duping primary school in China are now performing daily Michael Jackson dance routines, as part of their health and exercise regime.

Around 700 students from across all grades assemble in the school's playground to get their daily dose of exercise, which once upon a time was somewhat more serene.

"We used to practice Tai Chi but the students said they wanted to do something more modern," said the school's principal Wan Lu.

"This is fun and it is also very good exercise for them," Wan added.

According to reports, the students favourite routine to rehearse is Jacko's robotic dance as featured in his 'Dangerous' videoclip (pictured below).
