Guild & PSA alert on law

THE Pharmacy Guild of Australia and the Pharmaceutical Society of Australia (PSA) have united to alert pharmacists to be aware of new privacy laws that come into effect from today.

The new 'Australian Privacy Principles' have a stronger emphasis on compliance and enforcement, giving the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner enhanced powers, including the ability to assess privacy performance and to seek penalties for serious or repeated breaches of privacy.

With the growth in electronic collection, storage and use of customer data, pharmacists needed to be aware of the nature of any information gathered, the PSA and Guild said.

Pharmacists need to be aware that the consumer owns their personal and health information and that pharmacists and pharmacy staff are the custodians of this.

When in doubt, pharmacists should always seek the consumer's consent before using or disclosing their personal or health information to a third party, the PSA said.

Each pharmacy needed to have a privacy policy in place which staff understood and complied with at all times, it said.

"While most pharmacists know they have a responsibility to comply with privacy legislation, there is understandably likely to be little awareness of the detail of the reforms which come into effect from today," the Guild and PSA said.

Integrated pharm

THE New Zealand National School of Pharmacy is looking at a fully integrated pharmacy programme, which incorporates the intern year into the BPharm degree.

This would involve the fourth and fifth years of the undergraduate program focussing on professional, practice and clinical pharmacy, with four 12 week extended placements, in addition to already existing placements.

The fourth placement would provide an opportunity for an elective, the School of Pharmacy said.

The School is conducting a feasibility study about the proposed programme and invites feedback.

Sigma adopts MedAdvisor

SIGMA Pharmaceuticals has called for community pharmacy to become the third pillar of the healthcare system and as such, has signed up for the MedAdvisor program.

Sigma chief operating officer Gary Dunne said pharmacists have a critical role to play in helping patients to use and manage their medication effectively, leading to improved health outcomes.

Through its 450 strong network of Amcal and Guardian pharmacies, Sigma is endorsing patient compliance program MedAdvisor bringing to 1,500 the number of pharmacies who have signed up.

The Sigma group joins the Chemmart, PharmaSave and Terry White Chemists groups who were among 1095 pharmacies to have signed up to the program as of February (PD 11 Feb).

"We know that even a modest improvement in medicine adherence across the community will help ease the cost burden on the health system, whether that comes via reduced demand on hospital resources or from seeking treatment for otherwise manageable conditions."

MedAdvisor managing director Josh Swinnerton said the program allowed pharmacists to build better relationships with their customers, and customer loyalty was a win-win for all.

BonaDea April launch

A NEW patient engagement platform by PharmEngage Pty Ltd is readying to launch in Australia in April 2014 under the title BonaDea.

BonaDea will launch with a foundation of 1500 pharmacies integrating compliance and awareness programs that are claimed to almost double the compliance improvement rates obtained by traditional repeat reminders only.

"In the growing world of digital health, we know that patients are eager to engage with trusted, credible sources of information," said Grant Baker, PharmaEdge director.

Antibiotics and CVD

A PAPER published in the Annals of Family Medicine examining data from a large cohort of patients supports other recent conclusions that treatment with the antithrombotic azithromycin (Zithromax/Zmax) significantly increases the risk of death and cardiac arrhythmia in the first five days of treatment.

Another link was drawn between antibiotic levofloxacin (Levaquin) and a similar increased risk.

DISPENSARY CORNER

MAYBE just let it go. If you end up chasing a note down the road today, it might pay to let it go, following the story of a man who got stuck in an underground drain for two days after chasing a US$20 bill. The man from Oklahoma's cries alerted people to his woes and an emergency crew were able to rescue him, Orange News reported. The really draining part of the story? The man never did find the bill, the publication reports.

JUST keep it. Ever borrowed something you forgot to give back, only to find it years later and wonder...should I? Well, fret no more - someone in Kansas did just that, returning a cookbook checked out from a Kansas library in Sep 1992, 6NewsLawrence reported.

The book was 'The Versatile Grain and the Elegant Bean: A Celebration of the World's Most Healthful Foods', which doesn't ostensibly seem like a book you'd really want to keep for two decades - Associated Press reports that the maximum late fee has risen from US$3 to a whopping US$4.50. The book was placed in a Lawrence Public Library return box at night, 6NewsLawrence reported.

YOU'VE got to be kidding me. Boy, talk about a bad day - a driver from Ontario, in Quebec, has managed to pick up three traffic tickets within five blocks. Joey Menscik and his wife were ticketed for their ute's illegally tinted windows, for CAD$162, then for coasting through a stop sign, for another CAD$162, and finally, by a third officer, for driving through another stop sign, Yahoo News reported. The Mensciks said they did stop and feel they were penalised because they had Ontario plates, the publication said.
