PRIME Minister Malcolm Turnbull has confirmed the resignation on Friday of Health Minister Sussan Ley (PD breaking news Fri), who on Monday last week had stepped aside pending an investigation into her travel expenses claims.

Senator Arthur Sinodinos, who was appointed to caretake the portfolio (PD 10 Jan), has been cited by a number of sources as the most likely replacement.

China loves Blackmores

THE colossal Asian market is likely to lift Blackmores into the top five brands selling online in China, according to Credit Suisse financial analyst Ben Levin.

Ongoing growth in Blackmores' sales momentum appeared to have continued through Dec after a strong Nov, Levin is quoted as saying in The Australian.

"In fact, we have seen evidence that Blackmores is firmly in the top 10, if not skirting the top 5, vitamins brands, domestic and international, selling online in China," he said in a client note.

Although Blackmores shares had been trading around 9% below their recent $119 high, they added 4.5% last week.

Levin also said he expected Blackmores' inventory position for the first half of 2017 would improve as retailer/wholesale destocking subsided and sales improved.

While Australian sales were down 40% to $68m last quarter, Blackmores' China business recorded a 220% jump in sales to $31m, as reported in its quarterly results (PD 28 Oct 16).

As well as selling direct to Chinese consumers online, Blackmores is among products sold on Alibaba's T-Mall online marketplace in China by Chemist Warehouse, which set a sales record as the highest selling overseas merchant during the annual 'Singles Day' sales extravaganza (PD 14 Nov).

Course on the nose

THE Pharmacy Guild of Australia has announced the addition to the myCPD site of a new course examining the management of allergic rhinitis as it plays out in a community pharmacy setting.

The Guild Pharmacy Academy said it had developed the new online course as part of the popular Pharmacy Health Solutions which had been designed to help pharmacies engage with their patients and assist them in achieving a better health outcome.

Guild Victorian branch president and community pharmacist Anthony Tassone said, "In some patients, allergic rhinitis can have a significant impact on their ability to work, focus at school and go about their daily activities.

"Many are not aware of the treatment options available or what is most appropriate for them."

Tassone said community pharmacists could establish an ongoing relationship with the patient and assist them with the best medicines to resolve this common condition.

Dispensary Corner

IF YOU'RE allergic to the cold, the icy province of Saskatoon in Canada where the temperatures can drop to below -20 C would have to be one of the least practical places on earth for you to live.

For the past three decades she has lived with cold urticaria - a condition in which exposure to cold makes her skin itchy and red and her body swell up.

She says she receives a lot of scepticism about her condition despite having had it diagnosed by a dermatologist.

Even eating ice cream makes her lips swell.

While the tropics would be a much better climate for her, she stays in Canada to live close by her family.

JUNK food addicted raccoons in the US have been forced to move away from their sugary snacks.

The animals which were living in an Ormond neighbourhood in Destrehan, Louisiana, had to be relocated by St Charles Animal Control after they were being fed sugar laden treats such as marshmallows, donuts and cookies by those living in the area.

The chubby raccoons were weighing up to 18 kgs each.

Animal control staff have put out a warning not to feed them.

Ondansetron trumped by chewing gum

LEADING antiemetic ondansetron may have met its match in efforts to stem the tides of nausea for women post-operatively, in the form of Wrigley's peppermint chewing gum.

Royal Melbourne Hospital lead researcher Dr Jai Darvall tested the two alternatives in 94 patients.

Of those in the gum group, 75% reported full resolution of their nausea while only 37% of the ondansetron group had relief.

The study was published in the British Journal of Anaesthesia and needs broader testing, Darvall said.

Choosing the right fish oil for you!

THERE is such a variety of fish oils available now it can become very overwhelming to choose the right fish oil for you.

One of the best ways to determine how to buy a fish oil supplement is to determine the efficacy and purity of the product.

A good place to start is Friend of the Sea, a non-profit, non-governmental organisation (NGO), whose mission is conservation. Sustainability is the key to the future and choosing a fish oil which has been made from sustainably caught fish is aligned with preserving our marine habitat. Products that bear the Global Organisation of EPA and DHA Omega-3s (GOED) logo support optimal EPA and DHA Omega-3 intake which highlights quality and the 5 star IFOS (International Fish Oil Standards) logo independently tests fish oils for purity, potency and freshness.

The Good Manufacturing Practices logo (GMP) means the fish oil has been made to process and procedure guidelines which will support a high quality pharmaceutical supplement. For more information on quality, natural supplements, contact info@southernature.com.au.
