Arthrem monitoring

THE Therapeutic Goods Administration has advised that it is monitoring the safety of Arthrem capsules, a complementary medicine marketed as a dietary supplement for maintaining and supporting joint health & mobility.

The move follows an alert by NZ regulator MedSafe, which has received a number of reports of liver toxicity associated with the use of Arthrem (PD 19 Feb).

To date the TGA has not received any reports of adverse events, however the product's sponsor, Promisia Australia, is changing medicine labels to indicate the rare possibility of liver harm and amending all messaging to stress it must be taken strictly as directed.

In an update last month (PD 20 Feb) Promisia said adverse events were very rare, and "when taken as directed Arthrem is safe & effective".

key to reducing over-prescribing of these drugs, the study showed.

Data from 7,274 GP surgeries was studied and compared with nine practices that had GPs who had training in integrative medicine, looking at overall prescribing of antibiotics, as well as prescribing of these drugs for respiratory tract infections and for urinary tract infections.

While the authors pointed out that patients who visit integrative medicine doctors may be less keen on using antibiotics anyway, the data was interesting and demanded further investigation.

EVER been told you look like death warmed up? Well that's exactly the nightmare a man in Romania has been facing after been told by the government they don't believe he is alive.

Constantin Reliu spent more than 20 years of his professional life working as a cook in Turkey, however, when he returned to his homeland he learned his wife had him formally registered as dead.

"I am a living ghost," Reliu recently told local media.

"I have no income and because I am listed as dead, I can't do anything."

The only thing left to do I suppose is tell the Romanian Government to drop dead - I mean, fair's fair, right?

IT TURNS out that being a fall down drunk might not be bad for you after all, so long as by falling down we mean taking a nap and by drunk we mean a little bit tipsy.

A study from Washington State University and Harvard Medical School Scientists recently concluded that two glasses of wine before catching 40 winks could actually help people in the fight against obesity.

Scientists identified a polyphenol in red wine that aids with weight loss.

Despite the medical revelation, you're not likely to see any contestants on The Biggest Loser getting drunk anytime soon.
